

3 Tips to Improve Communication with Your Youth & Young Adults

Item Type	Transitions ACR
Authors	Family Advisory Board & Young Adult Advisory Board, Transitions to Adulthood Center for Research
Citation	Transitions to Adulthood Center for Research Family Advisory Board & Young Adult Advisory Board. (2022). 3 Tips to Improve Communication with Your Youth & Young Adults. Worcester, MA: UMass Chan Medical School, Department of Psychiatry, Implementation Science and Practice Advances Research Center (iSPARC), Transitions to Adulthood Center for Research.
DOI	10.7191/pib.51255
Publisher	UMass Chan Medical School
Rights	Copyright © 2022 UMass Chan Medical School
Download date	29/03/2023 14:58:07
Item License	https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc/4.0/
Link to Item	http://hdl.handle.net/20.500.14038/51255

3 Tips to Improve Communication with Your Youth & Young Adults

It can be hard for parents or guardians of youth and young adults (ages 14–26) to connect with the young people they care for. Creating a relationship through casual conversation can help to foster trust and open dialogue between a parent or guardian and the young person they want to connect with. By building this relationship, it can open the door for a young person to go to the parent or guardian when they have concerns or need advice. This tip sheet was developed as a collaboration between the family member and young adult advisory boards that work with the Transitions to Adulthood Center for Research. The tips are based on advisory board members’ real experiences.

TIP 1 Understand SUPPORT vs. SOLUTIONS

When your young adult comes to you with a problem they are having, you may think, “Here’s my chance to be a great parent and help them fix their problems.” But before jumping in to solve their problem, remember that sometimes your job is to simply listen, acknowledge that you heard them and show empathy. Sometimes your young adult doesn’t need or want advice, they just want to vent.

“ Parents - please listen to understand me. Don't listen to respond. When parents say 'You should do this and that' it causes STRESS. Use this as a time to learn about your kid.” — YAB Member

“ Sometimes I just need support. Sometimes I need guidance and solutions but I will tell my parents that. Some parents are fixers and press to the point where their teen will shut down. I can usually arrive at a solution myself if I have a chance to talk out loud to someone.”

— Young Adult Advisory Board (YAB) Member

Your role as a parent:

- Ask, “Do you want me to just listen, or do you want my advice too?” Let them respond and then respect their answer.
- Don’t feel the need to “teach a new lesson” or solve a problem unless given permission. This often shuts down a young adult and turns off open communication. Listening can be enough.

TIP 2

Have “Goodwill” conversations 80–90% of the time.

“Goodwill Conversations” have no agenda and can help strengthen your relationship. The topics can be varied but the focus is not your child nor your relationship.

- These conversations are not about “them” and so defensiveness, anxiety, annoyance and all these common feelings are minimized.
- Have “goodwill” conversations through everyday life.

Take opportunities for one-on-one non-threatening conversations, like discussing a favorite podcast on the drive to school or recipes you want to try while cooking dinner.

Be curious. Ask opinions about things that are not related to them, like a local news story, sports teams, upcoming events, funny memes.

Be a “curious anthropologist” and listen without the need to say anything other than “Well, that’s interesting” or “Tell me more.”

- Find “family time” activities like watching a show together, Tuesday pizza night, or a shared hobby.
- Parents also can build connections with their young adults by having no conversation at all. Sometimes your young adult isn’t in a place where they want to talk. Just being together can be a way to build a good relationship.

“Goodwill/No Agenda Conversations are ‘deposits’ into the relationship bank.”

— Family Advisory Board (FAB) Member

“I asked my teen to explain a meme to me and it generated so much laughter on their part. I think they felt sorry for me, but also found me kind of ‘cute’ for asking. It definitely increased the good will between us”

— FAB Member

“Try and be present to “what-is” with your young adult in the moment. Sometimes you have to be open and not have any agenda at all, and just be willing to meet them where they are at. That may be sitting quietly in the same room with no conversation.”

— FAB Member

TIP 3

Keep “Problem Solving Conversations” to 10–20% of your talk time.

Problem Solving Conversations: These conversations have an agenda of forward progress on a specific issue.

- Many parents have a running agenda of issues they want to resolve with their young adult. But try and keep these “problem solving” conversations to only 10-20% of your time with your young adult.

TIP 3 CONT.

Keep “Problem Solving Conversations” to 10–20% of your talk time.

These types of conversations may cover topics like:

- Employment, school grades, concerns about unhealthy behaviors, chores, concerns about friend choices.

WHEN YOU HAVE A PROBLEM YOU'D LIKE RESOLVED:

- Your role as a parent is to pay attention, be an active listener, be in control of your own feelings, direct the conversation but know when to step back, and make sure your YA doesn't feel “double-teamed” if you are there with a partner.

FAB Member Tip: “Take a few minutes before a potentially difficult conversation — set calm intentions, get centered and grounded.”

“I always am anxious getting into the car with my mom. I'm afraid she's going to bring up something I don't want to talk about and I feel trapped”
— Young Adult

- It helps to begin with a request for a conversation and/or a timeframe. “I have something I'm struggling with that I want to talk with you about. It should only take 10 minutes. Can we talk now?”
- A car ride may be a great place for “goodwill conversations” but is not a good place for problem solving conversations (unless initiated by your young adult).
- Collaborate — Involve your young adult with identifying problem and solution and be consistent. Ask what they need and involve them in defining the problem.
- Support good ideas.
- Assume neutral intent and stay neutral if you can. If emotions get too intense, your young adult may shut down.
- Let your young adult know you want to understand what is going on for them when appropriate.

FAB Member Tip: “Remember to attack the problem, not each other and validate the feelings not necessarily the actions.”

Resources

AMP's Top Ten Tips for Engaging with Young People

<https://www.pathwaysrtc.pdx.edu/pdf/proj-5-AMP-top-ten-tips-for-engaging-young-people.pdf>

How to Negotiate With Your Family Without Hurting the Relationship at All

<https://www.lifehack.org/606160/how-to-negotiate-with-your-family-without-hurting-the-relationship-at-all>

When Texting Your Teen, Follow These Four (Not So) Simple Rules

<https://grownandflown.com/when-texting-teen-follow-four-rules>

To Give Better Advice, Try Less Fixing and More Listening

<https://www.npr.org/2020/02/24/808811358/how-to-give-advice-less-fixing-more-listening>

What's Wrong With Giving Advice

<https://www.psychologytoday.com/us/blog/turning-point/201503/whats-wrong-giving-advice>

Learn about Motivational Interviewing Skills for Parents

<https://learnaboutmilo.com/>

<https://www.naminh.org/wp-content/uploads/2021/04/Motivational-Interviewing2021AnnualConference.pdf>

Books by Dr. Ross Greene, a clinical psychologist who has worked with children and families for over 30 years

<https://drrossgreene.com/books.htm>

I AM NOT SICK I Don't Need Help! Written by Dr. Xavier Amador

<https://leapinstitute.org/leap-books/>

Recommended Citation: Transitions to Adulthood Center for Research Family Advisory Board & Young Adult Advisory Board. (2022). 3 Tips to Improve Communication with Your Youth & Young Adults. Worcester, MA: UMass Chan Medical School, Department of Psychiatry, Implementation Science and Practice Advances Research Center (iSPARC), Transitions to Adulthood Center for Research.

The contents of this tip sheet were supported in part under grants with funding from the National Institute on Disability, Independent Living, and Rehabilitation Research, (NIDILRR), United States Departments of Health and Human Services (NIDILRR grant number 90RTEM0005, The Learning and Working Transitions RRTC). NIDILRR is a Center within the Administration for Community Living (ACL), Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). The contents of this tip sheet do not necessarily represent the policy of NIDILRR, ACL, or HHS and you should not assume endorsement by the Federal Government.

This publication can be made available in alternative formats upon request through TransitionsACR@umassmed.edu.

This is a product of Psychiatry Information in Brief. An electronic copy of this tip sheet with full references can be found at: <https://repository.escholarship.umassmed.edu/handle/20.500.14038/221>

© 2022 UMass Chan Medical School.
All Rights Reserved.